

Things to Know

What kind of compensations are possible depends on the individual situation and set of difficulties. Examples are:

- Oral exam instead of a written exam (for example for those with a visual impairment)
- Written exam instead of an oral exam (for example for those with impaired hearing)
- Extra time during written exams (for example for those with a motor impairment, but also in case of dyslexia, ADHD, diabetes or the need to regularly take sedatives)
- A separate room when taking written exams (for example in the case of disorders leading to significant concentration problems)
- Writing a research paper instead of giving a presentation
- Special breaks during exams
- Extra time when writing a research paper or Bachelor's thesis
- Permission to use assistive technology or other assistive devices
- Option to withdraw registration for an exam because of illness
- Longer intervals between different exams